Castaic Schools to Consider Sanctuary Strategy

By Lee Barnathan
Contributor

A typical school board meeting packet runs hundreds of pages and includes a series of documents pertaining to the various agenda items. For the Castaic Union School District's Feb. 16 meeting, the packet is a mind-numbing 331 pages.

However, anyone that reads pages 156-7 might notice that the events in Washington have crept into this little burg.

The school board is considering a resolution that would declare the Castaic District a "Safe Haven School District."

Similar to "sanctuary cities," which protect unauthorized, undocumented and illegal immigrants by not prosecuting them for violating federal immigration laws and by ensuring that all residents have access to city services, regardless of immigration status, Castaic is seeking to protect children of these immigrants. According to Politico, at least 37 cities, including Los Angeles, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Oakland, Phoenix, Boston, Seattle and Washington have declared themselves as such, opposing President Trump's immigration policies.

District Follows City's Example, Chooses to Appoint

By Lee Barnathan

An appointment process again rears its head in the area, this time in the William S. Hart Union High School District. How cooperative the district will be about publicizing who applies remains to be seen.

The district is using two court cases as justification for keeping the applications private, but the district board president wants to make public as much information as possible.
